Social media is ever changing to adjust and to fit to the interest of its exponentially growing market of users.

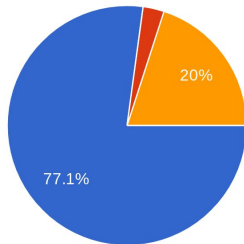

Social media is always changing for each generation and holding it to what the new generation wants.

It has evolved with the people who use it, and make it better.

Do you think these changes were affected by quarantine?

Lots of teenagers looked to social media to connect with others.

Being trapped in the house for an extended period of time, people became increasingly involved in social media spaces. This contributed to the creation of online communities, both negative and positive.

Are these changes positive, negative, or both?

Social medias help but also hurt people.

It's a double edged sword in the fact that it not only brings us together, but also rips us apart.

Everyone has different mindsets and ways of thinking. Some are positive, but of course there can be negative comments and outputs.
